

Abstract

The invention relates to a closure device for a container for liquid fuel, which irrespective of the orientation of the container ensures pressure equalisation between a gas space of the container and the outside, 5 furthermore preventing liquid from being unintentionally emitted and in addition facilitating liquid removal without having to remove the closure device.